Dear Sir,

Amaravati Buddhist Centre, Great Gaddesden:
Proposed new electricity supply

The English Sangha Trust Limited (the "Trust") is the freehold owner of Amaravati Buddhist Centre, formerly St Margaret's School, at Great Gaddesden, now occupied and used as a Buddhist monastic college.

The present electricity supply to Amaravati Buddhist Centre, rated at only 80kVA, is considered by the Trust to be inadequate for present and projected requirements. The Trust has been negotiating with the Eastern Electricity Board (the "EEB") for an improved supply. The EEB has proposed to replace an existing pole-mounted substation with two new low-voltage substations within the curtilage of the Centre and to lay sub-surface supplies from the substations to certain of the buildings in the Centre.

In implementing the proposal, the EEB will require the Trust to provide substation bases and enclosures, the enclosures each to measure about 4 metres by 4 metres and to comprise close-boarded fencing 1850 mm high provided with a 2000 mm wide gate. I enclose two copies each of a location plan and a site plan. The positions of the proposed substations are marked on the site plan and coloured red.

We believe that the substation enclosures would constitute permitted development and that planning permission would accordingly not be required. We shall be grateful if you will consider the matter and issue a Section 53 determination.

Yours sincerely,

Lawrence Haines
